A Message From Our Education Program Manager Jill Wright

I started with Project Literacy as the Education Program Manager at the beginning of June. Before starting with Project Literacy, I worked as the ESL (English as a Second Language) Program co-Coordinator at the Ridgewood Public Library for over five years, successfully expanding the program from 32 to over 125 students annually. During this time I also conducted ESL Tutor Training Workshops at libraries in Bergen County, and taught ESL classes at the Ridgewood and Paramus Public Libraries. My ESL teaching experience began in 1993 and, since then, I have taught all ages from children to seniors in various settings and locations.

Since beginning with Project Literacy, we have successfully conducted one ESL Tutor Training and one Basic Literacy Tutor Training.

We also have the privilege of working with a new client, Biomet Inc. located in Fair Lawn, NJ, teaching on-site workplace ESL classes for some of this company's staff. These students are making noticeable progress in their English language skills, and the company is pleased with this progress.

Behind the scenes, we are compiling and consolidating student and tutor information into one database, which will allow us to easily access and document the progress of our students, simplifying reports and grant-writing. We continue to move forward with reading assessments of our Basic Literacy students, which identify the students' strengths and weaknesses, and assist tutors in planning their class lessons.

New Trustee Member

Project Literacy of Greater Bergen County is pleased to welcome a new trustee member, Larry Eisen. Larry is the owner of FIP Graphics in Hackensack. He is very active in his community and serves on several boards including the Hackensack Chamber of Commerce and Jewish Family Service. Larry brings a wealth of experience from the non-profit world.

Celebrities Come Out To Support Project Literacy

Project Literacy is honored that many celebrities such as Cousin Bruce, the legendary rock group The Drifters and Charles Grodin (sponsored by Rosica Public Relations, Inc.) were able to support our cause by speaking passionately about the issue of literacy and raising funds for our organization.

8th Annual Fundraising Gala

Project Literacy of Greater Bergen County held its 8th annual fund raising Gala at the Stony Hill Inn on October 14th. The event raised over $70,000 for our agency. The guests had a wonderful time, dancing to the music. They also had an opportunity to learn more about our organization by listening to the words of two of our students who gave inspiring speeches. Miss NJ, Katharyn Nicolle, also attended and spoke. Her platform for the national Miss America pageant is literacy. The theme of the evening was "Enchanted Forest." Estee Lauder, Verizon, and TD Bank were recognized for their continued support of Project Literacy.

Student Story

My name is Ganace Sookdeo. I grew up in a rural district in my native country, which is Guyana, South America. Guyana was formally a British colony where English is the first language. The educational system is very high in my country. However, for people like me who grew up in the rural country, formal education was not necessary. We were farm people who needed to work the land. Because of these circumstances, I did not get a formal education. I only went to school for about three years. My father was more interested in me looking after the cattle, sheep and goats than schooling. When I came to this country, I saw many opportunities around me, but I couldn't grab any of them because of my inability to read and write.

I have spent over fifty years of my life not knowing how to read and write properly. I can testify to the fact that it was real difficult to live that way. Everywhere I went, I had to ask someone for help. When I had to fill out forms at doctor's offices or for job applications, I had to ask someone to do it for me. Many times when I went to those places, I would pretend that I was looking for my eye glasses and then I could ask for help. Doing that was embarrassing because I was always neatly dressed and trying to look good and feel good about myself, but when the time came to ask for help, I felt like a dead dog. Most times I was lucky to find someone, but not all the time.

Then I went to a company to ask for a job. They gave me an application to fill out and I took it home. I had my son fill it out. I took it back, and I got the job. However, sometimes when they gave me work I had problems because I needed to read and write. Because I did not want to lose my job, I decided to get educated.

When I started at Project Literacy, I did not know anything about mathematics. I did not understand nouns and pronouns. Project Literacy gave me a wonderful tutor named Daniel. Then I had Carol. They were always patient, understanding and never gave up on me. Because of their help, they convinced me that I was capable of passing the GED and then go onto college. I passed the GED last February!

The people involved at Project Literacy, I see them with their hands stretched out far and wide and rescue people like me.

The Problem of Adult Illiteracy in Numbers

- In the U.S., 30 million people over age 16 (14 percent of the country's adult population) don't read well enough to fill out a job application.
- The United States ranks fifth in adult literacy skills when compared to other industrialized nations.
- More than 60 percent of all state and federal corrections inmates can barely read and write.
- Low health literacy costs between $106 billion and $238 billion each year in the U.S. — 7 to 17 percent of all annual personal health care spending.
- Low literacy's effects cost the U.S. $225 billion or more each year in non-productivity in the workforce, crime, and loss of tax revenue due to unemployment.
- Elderly people who cannot navigate health information have a 50% higher chance of dying earlier than those who are able to comprehend prescription bottles, doctor appointment slips and hospital forms, according to the journal, Archives of Internal Medicine.
